

vaulting has gone, but this was only to be expected, and the crypt now full of rubble and other debris needs to be carefully removed. Endeavours have been made to find the original steps leading to the crypt, but so far without success. In this connection, the top of a wall running diagonally across the trench has been exposed. As this wall does not conform to the usual Norman plan it may well be a portion of the original Saxon Church.

Attempts were made to locate one of the main crypt pillars at the commencement of the apse. This apse, in common with the majority of the large Norman churches of its day, such as Canterbury and Norwich is of a semi-circular form, with an ambulatory, connecting the north and south chancel aisles. The remains of a pier have probably been found complete with the vault springing.

This preliminary work has established the existence of the original crypt, and though the vaulting has disappeared a great amount of useful information would be obtained if the whole of the crypt were cleared and properly excavated.

During the work a number of pieces of moulded masonry, glazed tiles, fragments of mediæval pottery, and a small piece of stained glass were found. It is hoped that further work will be carried out in the future under the supervision of the Ancient Monuments Branch of the Ministry of Works.

Finds.—The following finds in West Suffolk, during 1947, are now in Moyses's Hall Museum, Bury St. Edmunds.

1. Roman Amphora, First Century A.D., of course, gritty buff-ware, Height 2 feet 10½ ins. Found at Kedington during the preparation of foundations of a house. The vessel lacks a small portion of the spike, but apart from a fracture at the base of the neck, since repaired, it is otherwise perfect.

2. Two very fine neolithic flint celts, one from Thelnetham, presented by Mr. R. Payne, and the other from Hengrave, found and presented by Mr. David Hewitt, of Bury St. Edmunds.
