NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS 2014

MATTHEW BRUDENELL is a Senior Archaeological Officer with the Suffolk County Council Archaeology Service Conservation Team. Formerly a Later Prehistoric Research Officer with the Cambridge Archaeological Unit, Matt specialises in the Bronze Age and Iron Age of Eastern England with expertise on the region's prehistoric ceramics. E-mail: matthew.brudenell@suffolk.gov.uk

MATTHEW CHAMPION is a freelance archaeologist, Project Director of the Norfolk and Suffolk Medieval Graffiti Surveys, and winner of the Awards for the Presentation of Heritage Research (2011), Marsh Award for Community Archaeology (2013) and the Community Archives and Heritage Group Award for Innovation (2014). E-mail: matt.champion@mjc-associates.co.uk

SIMON COTTON studied chemistry at Imperial College (BSc 1967; PhD 1970) before further research and teaching at QMC London and UEA, followed by thirty years as a schoolteacher. Now an Honorary Senior Lecturer at the University of Birmingham, he has just written his seventh chemistry book. He also specialises in using late-medieval documents to study church building and furnishing, notably in East Anglia. E-mail: s.cotton@bham.ac.uk

SHANNON HOGAN has worked in commercial archaeology since 2003 and for the last six years has been a site director for the Cambridge Archaeological Unit, running excavations of prehistoric landscapes and later Romano-British sites across the Eastern Counties. She has recently taken up a managerial post with Pre-Construct Archaeology Central and is continuing to oversee a wide variety of projects. E-mail: shogan@pre-construct.com

HELEN LUNNON is Tutor in Art History at the University of East Anglia. Her PhD thesis (UEA 2012) is a study of the form and function of medieval church porches in Norfolk and her ongoing research is principally concerned with the production and use of art and architecture in late-medieval England. Publications to date include church screens (Journal of the British Archaeological Association) and church porches (Church Monuments). E-mail: h.lunnon@uea.ac.uk

DAVID SHERLOCK is the husband of the current rector of All Saints' Church, Barrow, and a member of the council of SIAH. E-mail: davidasherlock@gmail.com

JONATHAN TABOR is a Senior Project Officer at the Cambridge Archaeological Unit. He has a particular interest in British prehistory and has directed numerous excavations across East Anglia over the past seven years having previously worked in north-east England. E-mail: jlt42@cam.ac.uk

LUCY WRAPSON is a Research Associate and Paintings Conservator at the Hamilton Kerr Institute, University of Cambridge. She completed her PhD thesis on Patterns of Production on East Anglian Medieval Screens at the University of Cambridge in 2013. Her research interests centre on late antique and medieval painting, particularly on painting technique, and she has published widely on the subject. E-mail: ljw31@cam.ac.uk
