NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS 2019

KEITH BRIGGS was born in Cambridge. He is professionally a mathematician and has worked in universities and the telecommunications industry. He has been interested in language history and onomastics from an early age and has worked on Suffolk place-names for the last fifteen years. He wrote a volume on this topic jointly with Kelly Kilpatrick in 2016, published jointly by SIAH and the English Place-Name Society (EPNS). He has published about twenty articles in the academic literature on place-names and Middle-English word-history, largely on Suffolk names and using Suffolk documents, and is now working on a much larger survey of the county's place-names, finding them to be a rich source for local history and dialect. He is a council member of the SIAH, the EPNS, and the Society for Name Studies in Britain and Ireland. Email: k.briggs73@btinternet.com.

ROB BROOKS has worked for Suffolk Archaeology as a Project Officer since its inception in 2015, and before that for Suffolk County Council Archaeological Service since 2001. During this time, he also completed a BA in Archaeology at the University of Southampton in 2007 and has run a variety of multi-period sites throughout Suffolk and Norfolk, including the site at Long Melford Primary School. E-mail: rob.brooks@suffolkarchaeology.co.uk.

KERRIE BULL is a Senior Project Officer at Archaeological Solutions. She completed a BSc at the University of Reading and has developed an extensive portfolio of fieldwork, including a large Roman site at Chilton Leys, Stowmarket, with extensive evidence for corn driers and pottery production, as well as a Saxon cemetery. E-mail: kerrie.bull@gmail.com.

GRAEME CLARKE graduated from the University of Edinburgh in 1998 with a degree in Archaeological Science. Graeme has worked with Oxford Archaeology East for the past ten years, most recently as a Project Officer. Involvement in many commercial fieldwork projects across East Anglia has led to a keen interest in the region's history and prehistory. As well as the current early Anglo-Saxon site, the last few years have been spent excavating later prehistoric settlement sites at Leiston and Wymondham, along with investigations into the Roman 'small town' of Wenhaston and ongoing excavations into the early medieval saltmaking industry of King's Lynn, Norfolk. E-mail: graeme.clarke@oxfordarch.co.uk.

RACHEL CLARKE graduated from Sheffield University and has nearly thirty years' experience in professional archaeology, predominantly as a fieldwork project officer working in the east of England. After joining OA (then Cambridgeshire County Council AFU), Rachel directed a range of projects, developing a particular interest in medieval and post-medieval archaeology. Rachel has published in local, regional and national journals/series and in 2014 left 'the field' to take on the role of Post-excavation Editor, editing grey literature reports and providing support and training for less-experienced colleagues in addition to authoring and editing publication articles and monographs. E-mail: rachel.clarke@oxfordarch.co.uk.

PAUL DRURY is a Chartered Surveyor who rapidly turned to archaeology, becoming director of Chelmsford Archaeological Trust in the 1970s, before joining English Heritage as an Inspector of Historic Buildings in 1984. He left as London Region Director in 1997 to establish a consultancy in historic environment policy and practice (now Drury McPherson Partnership). His abiding research interests are medieval floor tiles and sixteenth- and seventeenth-century major houses. In 2018 he was elected president of the Society of Antiquaries of London. Email: pdrury@dmpartnership.com.

DAN FIRTH initially set out studying a BSc in Forensic Science at the University of Lincoln, where he chose an optional forensic archaeology module. After graduation, Dan completed a one-year MSc in Bioarchaeology at the University of York. In April 2015 Dan joined Oxford Archaeology North where he worked on several large sites before moving to OA East in January 2016, since when he has been involved in a wide variety of sites across East Anglia and beyond including several cemetery sites. He currently works as a Fieldwork Supervisor and remains fascinated by the different funerary practices evident in the archaeological record, clearly there is still a bit of the forensic scientist in him!
E-mail: daniel.firth@oxfordarch.co.uk.

ANTONY MUSTCHIN was a Project Officer (post-excavation) at Archaeological Solutions and has recently progressed to being a consultant with Phoenix Consulting Archaeology Ltd. In addition to his work in East Anglia, Antony maintains a strong research interest in the archaeology of the north Atlantic, notably on the Shetland Isles.
E-mail: antonymustchin@phoenix-archaeology.com.

ANDREW A.S. NEWTON works in post-excavation for Archaeological Solutions Ltd and has been with that organisation since 2005. In that time he has authored a number of excavation reports and publications on sites in eastern England, covering a wide range of periods and including the notable sites at Blackhorse Farm, Sawtry and Dernford Farm, Sawston. E-mail: andy.newton@ascontracts.co.uk.

JUDE PLOUVIEZ is a specialist in the archaeology of Roman Britain. She was an Archaeological Officer with Suffolk County Council Archaeological Service for many years. She is a part-time researcher in the Leverhulme-funded project, 'Lordship and landscape in East Anglia, AD 400–800', at UCL Institute of Archaeology. E-mail: jude@plouviez.co.uk.
