NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS 2020

DAVID DYMOND is one of Britain's most highly respected local historians. He is a vice president of the SIAH, as well as of the British Association for Local History, President of the Suffolk Records Society and an honorary fellow of the University of East Anglia. He has written several valued books about the practice of local history, notably Researching and Writing History, as well as having taught on local history courses for almost half a century. His own research centres on East Anglia and he has written widely on a range of topics and themes including, most recently, The Business of the Suffolk Parish: 1558–1625, which was published by the SIAH in 2018.

RICHARD HOGGETT is a freelance heritage consultant, writer and lecturer with over 20 years' experience in the academic, commercial and local authority heritage sectors. An authority on Anglo-Saxon and medieval monasticism in East Anglia, he is the author of The Archaeology of the East Anglian Conversion (2010) and a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries of London. In 2018, he completed a detailed Heritage Assessment of the Abbey of St Edmund for the Abbey of St Edmund Heritage Partnership and he continues to work on a variety of different projects concerning the abbey. DAVID SHERLOCK, now retired, was sometime inspector of ancient monuments in East Anglia for English Heritage's predecessor, the Department of the Environment. He was the editor of the Institute's Proceedings from 1967 to 1974 and was responsible for the St Edmund Commemorative Issue, 869–1969, which was published in Volume XXXI. Email: davidasherlock@gmail.com.

ROBIN WEBB began his career in commercial archaeology in and around Sheffield in 2005, having studied for a BA in Archaeology and Prehistory there. He went on to complete a masters degree in Archaeological Heritage Management at York in 2007, and in 2012 he began work with Oxford Archaeology East as an assistant supervisor. He is now a project officer with the company, where his work combines running excavations and evaluations in the field with post-excavation report writing. His interests are broad-ranging but focussed on the continuity/disparity between periods and the use of the landscape. Robin is an Associate of the Chartered Institute of Archaeologists (ACIfA).

TOM WOOLHOUSE is a project manager for Pre-Construct Archaeology Ltd (PCA). After studying history at Cambridge University, he has worked in development-led archaeology in East Anglia for sixteen years, directing excavations and bringing sites to publication in a number of local, regional and national journals and monograph series. His research interests are wide-ranging, including the transition from Roman to early medieval Britain, and the evolution of rural settlements and agricultural landscapes from later prehistory to the present. His current role with PCA involves managing all stages of commercial archaeological projects, including fieldwork, post-excavation analysis and publication. E-mail: twoolhouse@pre-construct.com.
